Oklahoma City, Nov. 15 (AP).—Admitting that he forged his own parole, L. M. Carson, former Creek county school superintendent, convicted of raising a warrant, was again in jail here today.

Carson was sentenced to 16 years.

Carson was sentenced to 15 years in the state penitentiary on a charge of raising a county school warrant from $4.05 to $204.05. He has been transferred to the reformatory at Granite and placed in charge of the institution school.

Four days ago a parole was received bearing the signatures of the Governor and Secretary of State. Carson returned to his wife and six children. The boys were disappointed.

Charges Alleging Improper Issuance of Free Automobile License Plates Results in Chautauque County and Dunkirk Officials Losing Plates.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 15 (AP).—Eighteen sets of free automobile license plates issued to officials of Chautauque county and the city of Dunkirk have been ordered turned in to the state by Henry Seilheimer, district director in charge of motor vehicles of the state tax department. Mr. Seilheimer stated today that he acted upon orders received from headquarters in Albany and added that the action was taken under the section of the motor vehicle law which limits the issuance of free license plates to machines owned by and operated for the state, cities, counties and towns.

The licenses include two issued to District Attorney Glen Woodin of Chautauque county and four to Sheriff Axel Levin.

Want Juniors to Drive in City

The ruling, recently put into effect, that young persons between the ages of sixteen and eighteen, holding a Junior driving license, cannot drive in a city was characterized as unfair and unjust by delegates to the eleventh annual meeting of the New York State Farm Bureau Federation in Syracuse last week.

The 1925 Legislature passed a law authorizing the Commission of Motor Vehicles to issue Junior Driving Licenses to young men and women between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years to drive to school and pursue such other business as requires the use of an automobile. These licenses were to permit the holders to drive anywhere in New York state except in cities of the first class.

On July 1, Commissioner Hartnett put into effect an order making it illegal for anyone holding a Junior license to drive for any purpose in any city of the state.

In a resolution passed at the meeting the Farm Bureau delegates pointed out that this ruling annulled a part of the law and caused an unjust and unfair hardship for thousands of young men and women who are compelled to drive in cities in order to reach their school.

The resolution protested this arbitrary ruling and urged the commissioner to enforce the law according to its original intent.

SEX DETERMINATION IN DAY OLD CHICKS

Many poultry men and scientists have spent years of their valuable time in trying to definitely determine sex in day-old chicks, because many practical poultry raisers believe that it is not profitable to raise cockerels even to broiler stage. Many poultry men are crowded for rearing room and would like to have what space they have available entirely for their pullets. Some men have even the optimism and foresight to try to find a way to go back to the egg itself before it is put into the incubator to do their selection there. However, as everyone knows, the volume of work has been done on day old chicks, and many old timers know the success of the supposed solutions arrived at. Some claimed that sex could be told by the pattern of the down on the chick. That was done in certain crosses, but never so in straight line breeding. Some claimed that the first chicks of a hatch that pipped through their shells were the cockerels, but no one today puts any faith in this claim. Likewise others have advanced theories with very questionable value.

Tuesday evening, November 16, H. M. Summers, in presenting "The Way of a Hen" at the Ulster Park Odd Fellow's Hall, Ulster Park, will discuss this and many other problems of the poultry man. The play, is an educational comedy in four acts brought to this community through the courtesy and enterprise of D. Ebel and Son. It is being presented a second time on Wednesday evening, November 17, at the Lake Katrine Grange Hall.

After the play, Mr. Summers will conduct an open discussion upon questions brought up by the poultry men present. Everyone is invited, there is no admission charge; everything is free.

KINGSTON, N. Y., NOV. 15, 1926.

A lady preacher in Philadelphia announced that in her next sermon she would name the world's greatest liar. She drew a great crowd, many rather expecting that she would name a local politician or a neighborhood gossip. But there was disappointment and complaint of having been "stunk" when she lamely and discreetly named "the devil."

The oldest man in the British empire is dead in Belfast at the age of 125. He was still young in comparison with a countryman of his in earlier times, old Thomas Parr who was born in 1483 and was buried in Westminster Abbey in 1633, his 152 years covering a part of the fifteenth, the whole of the sixteenth, and part of the seventeenth centuries. According to the International Encyclopedia, the amazing Parr took his first wife in his 51st year, had a lively love affair in his 105th year, and married a second time at the age of 120. It is even said that he died before his probable time because of too much drinking, rich food and excitement when the King summoned him to appear at court as a curiosity.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Representatives of the Woman's Party are again demanding absolute industrial equality between the sexes, this time in opposition to the forty-eight-hour bill for women at the hearings of the Industrial Survey Commission in New York. Their attitude in such connections logically involves demand for the repeal of all special legislation against night work for women, against placing them in occupations physically dangerous, against laws requiring special seats, rest rooms and sanitary arrangements for women, even against mothers' pensions and every other enactment in the interests of women who must work for a livelihood in addition to the business nature assigned to women as the mothers of the race.

Such an attitude logically involves demand for the repeal of nature itself or the biological fact that women in industry are called upon to play a double role, that of mothers as well as workers. This biological fact rather than chivalry, consideration for the social welfare rather than sentiment, is at the bottom of all laws lifting working women above the mere plane of equality and placing them in a protected group. Not merely the United States but the whole civilized world is of necessity committed to this principle. The Woman's Party, with its insistent demand for absolute equality as well as no discrimination, is confronted with a fundamental difference between the sexes, an immutable fact of life, which, like an immovable stone wall, blocks their path toward the achievement of their purposes.

PUBLIC DINNER SPEAKING.

Public dinner oratory is overdone in America. Even when the speeches are excellent there are likely to be too many of them and in his weariness the listener fails to give them due credit. Often speeches not any too good are followed by "remarks" from perhaps a dozen others who, eagerly accepting a general invitation, merely repeat what has already been said or deliver tiresomely uninspired platitudes. In view of such "over-muchness" at American public dinners and the need of moral reform, a recent account of how the thing is managed in Italy is suggestive as well as interesting.

In regard to large banquets attended by an American in Rome and Naples we read: "There were only two speeches, one made by the chairman of the meeting, who offered the toast, to which only a single response was made. However, there was no attempt to make everybody be quiet and listen. Those who wanted to hear seemed to close to the speakers, while the others sat at the smoking and chatting. As this was the regular thing, we can feel that any discomfort was shown by us."

been adopted in France as far back as the eighteenth century, for it is related in this connection that Talleyrand more than once played a trick on those who sat apart, not caring to listen. "He would rise in his place and not say a word, though keeping his lips moving. Those near him would laugh and applaud his artifice, while those at a distance would join in the applause at what they believed to be his eloquent remarks."

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M. D.

(Registered in accordance with the Copyright Act.)
All Round Knowledge Necessary in Medicine.

The idea behind the practice of medicine just a very few years ago was that it was to have a knowledge of the body in sickness, so that sick folks could be properly treated.

In daily practice the physician learned that there were certain ailments that he was unable to help, and when the diagnosis was made, the patient and physician simply awaited the end.

This applied to tuberculosis or consumption as it was called, and hundreds of thousands of victims died yearly because hope was abandoned.

Similarly with heart disease and diabetes.

Now tuberculosis is prevented, is arrested, and actually cured. Also with insulin, the majority of those suffering with diabetes can now live comfortably with the definite assurance that they can go about their daily duties, and live the ordinary life, by simply taking their daily dose of insulin.

In heart disease, while no cure has been attained, once the individual is made to realize that his heart is simply muscle (under nerve control of course), he can also go about his daily work, just as long as he does not overdo things, mentally or physically.

And so medicine has reached the point now where it uses all the knowledge of the other sciences, that is electricity, chemistry, study of animal organisms, proper drainage for homes, heating, ventilation and so forth, all with just the one idea, not that of curing the sick, but of preventing sickness.

Professor Van Hook of Chicago, states that the destinies of the nations depend upon all this knowledge, which the physician now must have. The physician does his best to bring this to the attention of the public, but he should really go further and enter public life, the political field.

If he did, then this necessary progress in civilization would go ahead by leaps and bounds, whereas it has only been by the loss of thousands of lives, that necessary medical and sanitary legislation has come into force.

WHY

Volcanoes Are Not Always in Eruption

Dr. Thomas A. Jagger, volcanologist at Kilauea on the island of Hawaii, took time off from his labors of studying the cause of the recent overflow of lava from Mauna Loa, which wiped out a village on its way down the slopes to the Pacific ocean, to go before the Pan-American Science Council at Honolulu and explain why a volcano becomes eruptive.

"The subject is one which I enter upon with diffidence," said Doctor Jagger. "I will try to tell you what happened to cause the explosion in the crater of Kilauea in May, 1924, when the fire pit suddenly went on a rampage and exploded. To do so it is necessary to review the happenings from a physical point of view. In 1919 Halemauau had a great flow of lava down to the sea, the culmination of a series of happenings which had been apparent for two years. When the lava reached the top it was the climax of a great rise marking a cycle of about nine years, and both volcanoes flowed lava at once."

"It was evident that something had released this gas. In 1920 there was a decline and the lava in Halemauau went down four or five hundred feet and sealed itself like wax. In Kilauea the lava showed itself about 100 feet from the top, roaring and tearing and boiling in that big pit, and then subsided in a pronounced manner."

"This was the beginning of this thing we call an eruption. The going down was the beginning of a big coming up, paradoxical as that may seem. The coming up was not a volcanic eruption of lava, but an explosion of steam in a hole in the ground produced in some fashion by the retirement of the lava into that great ridge that we call Hawaii."

"Merely the top of the ridge protrudes above the rim of water that we call the Pacific ocean, and we call the different high points Kilauea, Halemauau and so on. Its most active spot today is in the big hole that we call Kilauea. Mauna Loa, twenty miles to the west, is the next most active spot, but it erupts only once in four years, while Kilauea is almost continuous. We now know that during the cycle of nine years lava is down half of that period and up the other half."

"In thinking of the why, we have two possibilities. One is that the lava, which is gas-charged milk or glass, is relieved of pressure more and more through five years and goes down. The other possibility is that the lava is there all the time with a gas potential ready to do business when the trigger is pulled."

Why People Generally Believe Opai Unlucky

Other precious stones consist of a single layer as it were, always catching the light at a fixed angle. Inside the opal, however, there is not one, but a whole series of surfaces, all set at varying angles, so that the light breaks in different directions on each. It is this property that gives the opal its curiously changing colors, and it is too, this property that probably accounts for its stigma of being an unlucky stone. For inside the opal is an infinitesimally tiny drop of water, and if the stone be exposed to any severe heat, this moisture will often evaporate, with the result that the surfaces inside "fall together," and no longer break up the light with their old angles. But it was the mystery in the changing colors that first raised the story in popular superstition.

Why "Garden of the Gods"

There are few more widely known spots in the United States than the Garden of the Gods, near Colorado Springs, yet comparatively few persons, even in Colorado, have an idea of the origin of the name, says the Rocky Mountain News.

In 1850 Lewis N. Tappan, one of the active citizens of Denver, accompanied by three other men, went to the base of Pike's Peak to locate a town site. They selected what later became known as Colorado City, now a part of Colorado Springs. After making the selection, driving to the "town site" a wolf and killing an antelope, they decided to do a little exploring in the adjacent country.

In their travels the party came to a point where they overlooked a country of picturesque mountains and rocks. One of the men named Cable, viewing the scene, exclaimed: "Wonderful! That section is a garden for the gods!"

The others, viewing the scene, immediately announced that Garden of the Gods would be its name.

Why Leaves Change Color

Leaves change their color regardless of whether or not they are attacked by frost. The brilliant colors of dying leaves in autumn are due partly to chemical changes in the decaying chlorophyll and partly to the exposure of pigment cells previously concealed by an abundance of chlorophyll or other features of vital activity. The leaf drops because it no longer receives nourishment from the stem or tree.

Major General Baron Steuben the German Veteran and Disciplinarian of the American Army. Born November 15, 1750.

Frederick William Augustus Henry Ferdinand von Steuben, known in this country as Baron Steuben, was a German soldier, born in Magdeburg, Prussia, November 15, 1750.

His father, a captain in the army, took him when a mere child into the Crimea, whither he was ordered. The boy was only ten years of age when the father returned to Prussia. He was educated in the Jesuit colleges at Neisse and Breslau. At fourteen he served with his father in the war of 1744, three years later he was a cadet, and two years afterward was promoted to ensign. He was a lieutenant when wounded in the battle of Prague in the Seven Years' War; an adjutant-general in 1754, and was taken prisoner by the Russians at the capitulation of Colberg. In 1762 he was made aide to Frederick the Great, which fact is sufficient to establish the worth of his military character.

After the close of the war General Steuben allied various offices in Germany, and at the commencement of the American Revolution he was in a condition of gentlemanly affluence.

In 1777, while on his way to England to visit some English noblemen, he stopped at Paris. Meeting there Count St. Germain, the French minister of War, who knowing that the great weakness of the American colonies lay in their ignorance of military tactics and discipline, endeavored to persuade Steuben to go to America and instruct the soldiers.

The Baron refused, but the French brought about an interview with Benjamin Franklin and Silas Deane, and after further solicitation by his friend Germain he at length yielded, and resolved to cast his fortunes with the struggling colonies.

Embarking under the assumed name of "Frank" and after a stormy passage of forty-five days, he arrived at Portsmouth, N. H., December 1, 1777. The entire population went out to receive him.

He immediately addressed his recommendations to General Washington, at the same time requesting admission into the service. Washington referred him to Congress whither he traveled to York, Pennsylvania, when a committee of five was appointed to wait upon him. In this interview it developed that Steuben had an income sufficient for his support, and, like Lafayette and DeKalb, volunteered his services without becoming a burden upon Congress. His services were gladly accepted and Congress returned him thanks for his patriotic tender.

The American army was at the time wintered at Valley Forge, and in a most deplorable condition. At the sight of them Steuben declared that under such circumstances no European army could be kept together a single week.

He was appointed inspector general, with rank of major-general, and from that moment our whole military system assumed new shape. He introduced thorough discipline in the army, and prepared a manual of tactics which was approved by Congress.

The result of General Steuben's discipline was seen in the next campaign. In the battle of Monmouth, when he rallied the retreating and disordered troops of General Charles Lee like veterans. In the trial of Lee that followed, the testimony of Steuben offended the former and he made some disparaging remarks in regard to it. Steuben instantly challenged him, but Lee apologized. General Steuben wished to take command in the field but his high rank prevented his assignment.

In 1780 he acted as one of the court martial to try Major John Andre. Later he joined General Greene in North Carolina as a volunteer aid, and when Cornwallis was besieged at Yorktown Steuben took his place as major general in the line, and commanded in the trenches.

After the close of the war General Steuben retired to private life in New York city, where he remained for several years. He had impoverished himself for the benefit of his comrades.

Congress refused to fulfill its contract with him to pay him for his expenses, but he was given grants of land in Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and a whole township near Utica, N. Y., was given him by the New York Assembly, May 5, 1786. After seven years' delay Congress voted him a pension of $2,400.

Determined to make America his home, he built a log house on his land in Oneida county, now called Steubenville, rented a large portion of it to tenants, and, with a few domestics, lived there until his death, excepting during annual visits to New York city in the winter months.

He spent his time in his fine library, gardening and in cheerful companionship with his faithful aide, Walker and North, who remained with him until death. He was an expert chess player and a devotee of hunting.

On November 25, 1794, he was stricken with paralysis and three days later his long and active life closed.

In compliance with his own bequest, he was wrapped in his military cloak and buried in a plain coffin, without a stone. But his favorite aide, Colonel North, to whom he left all his property, erected a simple monument over his grave, to which many visitors annually resort.

Miss Draper Has Amused Royalty

Miss Draper, who is announced for an early appearance at the Kingston High School Auditorium Tuesday evening, November 23, has had a most unique honor paid her this past summer. Appearing in London for a series of her imitable character sketches, her program was brought to the attention of the King and Queen of England.—it is whispered, by no less a person than the Prince of Wales. London, during the season, is crowded with the most brilliant and best known of European society, and so Miss Draper's recitals were proving their usual success. About Week, at the height of the social calendar, saw many of the most gorgeous functions, among them, a great party at Windsor Castle. At this, Miss Draper was "commanded" to appear. She gave many of her best known sketches, which pleased immeasurably their Majesties. The honor was the greater because it was the first "command" performance given at the Castle since 1914, when just before the outbreak of the war, Sir Gerald Du Maurier had taken his whole company hither for an appearance.

This was not Miss Draper's first appearance before a royal audience, as last year while in Brussels the King and Queen of the Belgians were among the guests at a special recital, and when in Madrid, Miss Draper also had the pleasure of having present the Spanish royals. Her position is unique and the more so, because it is essentially individual, so inextricably in its possibilities. An English criticism is worth quoting in that connection. "If she will mimic Americans to Americans and English to English she will do a great work for Anglo-American friendship. If she does it the other way she will broaden the deep, strange sea, so deadly is her selection and presentation of national snuffpuffs." Her satire is unerringly telling, and her method at times can be scorching, but nevertheless it is true.

Service Comes First
The new satisfactory thing in all this earthly life is to be able to serve our fellow beings—first, those who are bound to us by ties of love; then, the wider circle of fellow creatures, fellow countrymen, or fellow men. The idea of service is a solid foundation for contentment in this world.—Charles W. Etna.

The Ulster County Farm Bureau

Letters calling members' attention to the renewal date on November 1st called attention to the economy effected through voluntary renewal.

Three hundred and sixty-one

An approximate saving of fifty cents per member is made for the Bureau
when each voluntary renewal arrives.
Besides a saving in money, considtimes of activity, are saved. This matter of time will be of more par-

SIMPLE SINGLE DIAL CONTROL

The single dial control of Atwater-Kent Radio has taken much of the guesswork out of radio. With one dial there is no joggling back and forth of a station is on the air and within range you just can't help getting it—instantly. The man who has never touched a radio before can operate this set as easily as a radio engineer. It simply is fascinating. You don't have to hunt for stations. Just select them—a turn of the one dial—and stations come sailing in, clear and strong.
